Guiteau's antics yesterday, the first day of his trial, may tend to convince some minds that he is really insane, but the impression it creates quite generally is that he is playing a cunningly devised part. That he appreciates the fact that his only escape from the gallows rests in the plea of insanity is evident from the "address," which he prepared for publication. He pronounces himself insane, something that a truly diseased mind racely, if ever, admits. He was sane enough to carefully devise the assassination and to adhere to his plan for weeks; to estimate the indignation of the populace and to prepare to escape it. He is sane enough now to realize his situation and see such points as may benefit him. Therefore, he is apparently sane enough to be held legally responsible for his act. Still, he will have every opportunity afforded to establish his insanity, if there is any real ground for the plea. But the "insanity dodge" has been played so often in behalf of atrocious criminals that the public will require the plea in this case to be very thoroughly substantiated before he is allowed the

The private station is not alone the post of honor. under certain conditions, according to the poet's lines, but it is getting to be also the approved place of safety. Mr. Jay Gould is doubtless inclined to that opinion by this time, any way. It now turns out that the late attempt to extort from him money or its equivalent in information touching probable movements in the stock markets, under the threat of assassination, is only one of a series of the kind tried on that gentleman, and it was because that sort of thing was becoming a little too frequent that steps were taken to entrap and arrest the criminal. The effort proved successful, on Sunday, through the joint action of the police and the post-office authorities of New York, and the offender is now in jail. His name is J. Howard Welles, and he appears to be well connected and of good character up to this point in his career. His friends are now claiming for him, however, a want of responsibility in the premises, on the ground of insanity. His first letter to Gould reads like that of a lunatic; but it is not easy to see how the plea interposed can in any way high standing. better his case. It may relieve him from the charge of blackmailing, but it puts him in the equally bad attitude of being a lunatic too dangerous to be at peril from the hand of a crank with a grievance, real or supposed, than from that of a black-mailer, who makes murderous threats for the purpose of Statistics show that it costs the southern cotton manufacturer ten per cent less for his raw material than it does his northern competitor, and that the profit of manufacturing cotton in the south is larger than in the north. Hence the number of factories in the south is rapidly increasing. Millions of dollars are now being expended in the erection of extensive factories in that section. The average profit of the southern factories last year was 22 per cent, and these are figures which tempt northern capital. This growth of manufacturing interests in the southern states is rapidly overcoming the free-trade sentiment of that section, and developing in its stead a sentiment favorable to a protective tariff. It will not probably be long until Georgia will take her stand beside Pennsylvania in support of a protective tariff. As the natural resources of the south develop conflicting interests will divide the people politically. It does not require prescience to foretell that a solid south will never figure in another national cam-

Judge Cox's very proper explanation yesterday as to the qualifications of jurymen served an excellent purpose in dispelling the idea that only an ignoramus too stupid to read or to weigh evidence is fit for jury duty. Under this enlightened and liberal construction of the common law rule, the court made good progress yesterday and to-day in selecting a jury.
